Environmental Security

Too Little, Too Late: Can We Save the Ocean from Plastic?

The oceans are our life support system, and if they fail, we fail. The oceans are in a critical condition. They are being exploited from overfishing, polluted with plastic, and warming from carbon emissions. We cannot solve the climate crisis without solving the ocean crisis first.

Entrepreneur and Marine Conservationist, Chris Gorell-Barnes, discusses how we can solve this crisis through marine protection and restoration, and in doing so secure Global Goal 14.

Chris introduces Sky CEO Jeremy Darroch, who shares his incredible journey of the Sky Ocean Rescue plan - #PassOnPlastic

Towards a World Without Packaging Waste

With plastic waste threatening the health of our oceans, rethinking the way we use and conserve the earth's resources is crucial. We need to move urgently towards a world where a circular economy thrives, and plastic is seen as a valuable resource.

James Quincey, CEO of Coca-Cola, is determined that Coca-Cola play a leading role in eliminating packaging waste. He explains how the company is working to collect and reuse a bottle or can for every one that it sells, and how innovation, collaboration, and partnerships will make this possible.

Passion and Profession for the Environment

Environmental protection is the key framework and the basis of both our everyday business and personal life.

The mission of the Audi Environmental Foundation is to combine innovation and environment for a liveable future.

Environmental Officer of Audi Group, Dr. Rüdiger Recknagel, highlights Audi's efforts to create a more sustainable future; creating 30 electric car models and making Audi plants CO2 neutral by 2025.

The Greatest Story is Now

Acclaimed singer and songwriter Ellie Goulding knows how to connect. In this exclusive address to One Young World, she tells the story of how she built the confidence to speak out on the climate emergency, and is now a UN Environment Global Ambassador, a role she has held since 2017.

In this session, Ellie represents Global Goal 13, and makes a powerful argument for us to listen, connect and tell the great stories of change and opportunity.

How Can Saving the Most Endangered Species on Earth Help Save the Planet?

Supermodel and philanthropist, Doutzen Kroes introduces primatologist and anthropologist, Dr Jane Goodall who speaks about her lifelong career working with some of the most endangered species on earth.

She discusses the balance between the treatment of animals and the health of the planet.

Dr. Jane Goodall DBE Founder, The Jane Goodall Institute, and UN Messenger of Peace

Anchored in their experiences and insights, Alan and Leena uncover a wide range of topics that are critical to ensure that businesses deliver a positive impact for society, the economy, and the environment.

As passionate advocates for the power of youth, Alan and Leena share their perspectives for how youth leadership can play a role in shaping the future of business.

Power of Millennials

There is nothing that makes board members shake more than today's youth. Their power to influence future product strategy, corporate HR policies, marketing and branding, and even the development of a company's supply chain, is incredible. The Youth have the power to dictate the future of consumption.

Gwendolyn Yu, Head of Engagement Transformation at BNP Paribas Group, discusses the power millennials have to bring about change.

Preparing Young People with the Skills to Succeed in the Workplace

Education is the cornerstone of sustainable development, yet there are over 800 million young people (aged 10-24) worldwide who will not have the skills necessary for the workforce of the future. There are clear gaps emerging in countries all over the world, between what is learnt in school, the skills people have, and the jobs and industries that will drive sustainable growth in the future.

Michele Parmelee, Deloitte Global Chief People & Purpose Officer, discusses how businesses are collaborating and making an impact in preparing young people for the Fourth Industrial Revolution, so that prosperity and progress are shared, and no one is left behind.

Be Courageous, Be Curious

Feike Sijbesma, CEO and Chairman of DSM, addresses the impact and power you can have as a leader. The world faces many challenges that we will need to solve together.

As a leader, what can you do to make this world a better place? What will your impact be? How can we do more, faster, together?

The Power of Unboss

Novartis produces more medicine than any other company with 70 billion doses a year. Human progress can be dramatically accelerated to improve human health in our lifetime. It starts with leaders listening and learning from employees.

CEO of Novartis, Vas Narasimhan, provides insight on how this way of leadership can allow for extraordinary things to happen.

Transforming Tech

If I had my own AI...

AI is here and increasingly woven into our lives, whilst potentially dangerous, the future will depend on its use. How will AI create a positive future for humanity, starting with you?

AI Foundation CEO, Lars Butler, and Co-Founder of Twitter, Biz Stone, provide an interactive keynote, focused on Human-AI collaboration, preparation, and trust – all in the context of your purpose. They uncover how each and every one of us can take our purpose further with AI.

Responsible Business

An Introduction to Professor Muhammad Yunus and Achieving the Three Zeros

Hans Reitz and Lamiya Morshed introduce Nobel Peace Laureate & Founder of the Grameen Bank, Professor Muhammad Yunus to discuss his mission to eradicate three unintended and harmful effects of unrestrained capitalism and how he intends to improve prospects for everyone.

Can Businesses Solve Social Problems?

More and more companies are building their business models around tackling important social problems. Whether it's efforts to limit climate change, embrace fair trade, or improve nutrition, businesses are coming up with creative ideas that overlap with a desire to make the world a better place.

Vismay Sharma, Managing Director, L'Oréal UK and Ireland, discusses how the untapped business potential of the professional haircare market in India is helping the company create jobs, provide education and alleviate poverty for millions of people.

The Future of Work

The technology-driven world in which we live, is a world filled with promises, but also challenges. In an era marked by rapid advances in automation and artificial intelligence, jobs will be lost, and jobs will be gained. Women and men will need to be skilled, mobile, and tech savvy to adapt to the new world of work. CEO of McKinsey, Dame Vivian Hunt, comments on how we need to be flexible to switching occupations and roles throughout our career, open to learning new skills as we go, and able to see education as a lifelong journey, not something that stops once we leave school.

Candid Conversation with Ronan Dunne and Lianna Brinded: Purposes of Education When Knowledge Won't Stand Still

Modern technology requires a lifelong-learning mentality, and not only for people in what we commonly call "technical" professions. We don't have the kind of structure in place that we need to facilitate lifelong learning. In other words, we don't just need better tech, we need better ways of developing, using, and understanding tech.

If we can reorient our approach to education to reflect these realities, we could make this century a turning point toward an entirely better version of the future.

Sustainable/Responsible Capitalism

Juergen Maier CBE, CEO Siemens plc, explores how businesses that want to flourish in the Fourth Industrial Revolution must embrace inclusive, sustainable capitalism.

He shares his ideas on what the Future of Work means for employees.

Education

Solving the Dual Challenge

The world faces a dual challenge: the need to reduce carbon emissions to net zero, while providing the increasing energy necessary for the world to continue to grow and prosper. Any sustainable path for the global energy system requires both challenges to be met: the need for more energy, and less carbon, as set out in the Paris Climate Change Agreement. BP's chief executive Bob Dudley, and chief economist Spencer Dale, illustrate this problem, and examine the role that energy companies, governments, and society, can play in meeting this challenge.

Linking Business & Education

The majority of the world's young people are living in developing countries. Tijmen Rooseboom, Ambassador for Youth, Education, and Work at The Netherlands Ministry of Foreign Affairs addresses the need for an integrated approach, where education is reformed to meet 21st century needs, ensuring young people are prepared for what the future of work might bring.

Young people's ideas, innovations and entrepreneurial projects are therefore crucial in order to achieve the SDG's by 2030.

Peacebuilding

As a long-time advocate and expert, Johnson & Johnson is committed to being a leader in the next chapter in mental health. The Company is building a network of resilient change makers who are the heart of healthy communities, generating a domino effect changing the trajectory of health for humanity.

Mary Robinson and Gro Harlem Brundtland are joined by interviewer Jon Snow to discuss the importance of the multilateral system to work together on global problems.

They discuss the transformation of our societies to be fairer and cleaner, the climate emergency, gender equality and the SDGs.

“The eyes of all future generations are upon you” – How Wales is leading the way on Intergenerational Justice

The Well-being of Future Generations Act (Wales) came into effect in April 2016, establishing the unique role of Future Generations Commissioner for Wales.

In her presentation, Wales' first Future Generations Commissioner, Sophie Howe, provides insight on the long-term benefits of intergenerational equality. She discusses the importance of improving the well-being for generations today, without compromising the ability of tomorrow's generations to meet their own needs.

The Irresistible Power of Curiosity

HE Omar Ghobash shares his experience of the world and how to make a difference despite pushback.

Providing guidance and lessons for young leaders to succeed in a world that can be averse to change, he discusses how we should continue to educate ourselves, whilst being aware of differing interests.

Mental Health

Technology and Mental Health

Technology touches billions around the world and has the power to create real change.

John Hanke, CEO of Niantic, discusses the benefits of his video games such as Pokemon Go on young people's mental health, encouraging them to exercise, socialise, and interact with one another.

Sharing his personal story with One Young World, Edward Enninful, Editor-in-Chief of British Vogue, discusses how rejection in the fashion industry provided him with the courage to stand up for himself, and highlight the importance of diversity and inclusion; representing those who are often sidelined in their careers.

Responsibility in Times of Transformation

At last year's summit, Peter Schwarzenbauer argued that a company's long-term right to exist depends on the ability to reflect on the role of business.

This year, he takes purpose to the next level: What are the main trends that are challenging today's economy? How can big companies help to solve today's problems and simultaneously shape their profile to exist in the future?

The Valuable 500

If disability isn't on your business agenda, then neither is diversity. 90% of companies claim to prioritise diversity, but only 4% actually do. Launched in 2014 at One Young World, Caroline Casey's campaign #valuable aims to spark a new age of business inclusion that positions disability on the global business agenda.

This session explores the journey of The Valuable 500 from the main stage of One Young World, to the World Economic Forum, and why Virgin Media COO Jeff Dodds has sponsored Caroline to get 500 companies to put disability inclusion on their board agenda.

Voices for Change. We Must Speak up

Health. Hygiene. Nutrition. Proper sanitation. A right to education and safe environment. All of these should be within everyone's reach. We all need to speak up.

Reckitt Benckiser CEO, Laxman Narasimhan, is joined on stage by disability activist, Oscar Anderson to explore the impact of having a voice and getting it heard.

Diversity in Sport

World class athletes discuss the unique role sport can play in bringing people together and promoting tolerance and understanding. Sharing their personal stories, Mark Tewksbury, Ellie Simmonds, and Surya Bonaly, reflect on the ways in which they have overcome obstacles, responded to pressure, and how their experiences and careers have influenced their supporters. They discuss the extent to which the Olympics and other major sporting events can alter public opinion.

For the third year running, Lumos join us to share their mission to help children in institutions globally return to a family environment. Joined by Author, and Founder & Life President of LUMOS J.K. ## Modern Day Slavery

There are currently more than 40 million men, women and children living in modern slavery. That is more than any other time in history and double the number of people involved in the transatlantic slave trade.

In this session, human rights activist Grace Forrest talks about the causes of modern day slavery and how we can fight to eradicate it. Human rights activist Yeonmi Park shares her testimony as a North Korean defector, being sold for less than $300 as a modern day slave in China at the age of 13. Both are joined in a Q&A by journalist Ilia Calderon.

In an ever more divided world, Halima encourages young leaders to make a difference and never give up hope. She is the first Hijab wearing model to be signed by a major agency and combines fashion with activism.

Bob Geldof - Call to Action

Bob Geldof addresses young leaders on the power of the people to bring about change in a world that lacks strong leadership. His call to action focuses on the mobilisation of young leaders to spread values and ideas to change the future.

We can do more than just express our sympathy for millions of oppressed modern slaves around the world. As free people, it is our duty to use our voices to speak for the voiceless."

Yeonmi Park North Korean Defector & Activist

Despite current fears, 76% of the One Young World community believe this generation will leave the planet in a better state than it is currently.

Our Ambassador projects tackle a variety of issues from air pollution in Africa, through the use of smokeless briquettes for cooking, to maintaining clean and sustainable water supplies in rural Peru.

Schemes have educated 1,674,953,868 people on environmental sustainability and impacted 1,342,595 people in getting access to physical and mental health services.

Poverty Alleviation

Can innovation solve economic inequality?

According to the IMF, the global economy is projected to grow by 3.5% this year, while the number of people officially living in poverty has tumbled to a record low, around 9% of the world's population.

Despite this, the World Bank believes that the United Nations Sustainable Development Goal of eradicating poverty by 2030 is unlikely to be met. 6% of the global population will still be living on less than $1.90 a day when the deadline arrives.

By 2030, the richest 1% of the world's population will control almost two-thirds (64%) of global wealth according to The British House of Commons.

One Young World Ambassador initiatives have given employability and entrepreneurial skills training to 652,500 students. Their projects have helped 202,970 people to overcome poverty and given access to affordable energy, clean water, and sanitation.

How can young entrepreneurs ensure a more sustainable and inclusive path to economic growth that benefits the poor as well as the wealth creators themselves?

Every time I see a problem, I create a business to solve it.”

Media Freedom

How can we protect the truth?

News is in crisis. While the Internet has provided the digital native generation with unprecedented opportunities for communication, it has also unleashed a tsunami of fake news and propaganda.

According to the Reuters Institute, 54% of people agree or strongly agree that they are concerned about what is real and fake on the Internet. Journalists are being killed, with 94 media workers dying in targeted killings, bomb attacks and crossfire in 2018.

One Young World Ambassador projects are fighting back for freedom of speech. Noorjahan Akbar's Free Women Writers scheme in Afghanistan provides a platform for 130 contributors and over 100,000 monthly readers. Saeed Atcha's Xplode magazine project has given media skills to 2,500 schoolchildren aged 10-11 and supported 90 children in creating their own magazines. Nyus Alfred created the Spote Avis platform for young sports journalists in the Eastern Caribbean.

How can young leaders create new models for online news that we can trust?

evil withering

human rights,
every one of us,
no matter where you are from,
must fight for
media freedom.”

Dalia Yousif Delegate

Education

Does the future of learning need to be re-imagined?

The world is evolving so fast that the school curriculum often struggles to keep pace. Digitally native school children can be bewildered by classroom teaching methods that shun the online resources at their fingertips.

Instead of learning about environmental sustainability, changing demographics, and the potential of artificial intelligence, children around the world learn from textbooks that would have been familiar to their parents and grandparents.

One Young World Ambassadors have utilised online tools and innovative teaching methods to impact 108,150 students, including child refugees in Malaysia and Myanmar. Their projects have taught 30,000 students and 200 school teachers how to code.

What more can young leaders do to ensure education systems evolve with our changing world?

Peaceful Future

In a polarised world how can we build peace?

In a polarised world, how can we build peace?

The 2018 Global Peace Index found that conflicts have increased in the past decade. It recorded a deterioration in peace in six of the nine regions of the world and in 92 countries. Terrorism and internal conflict were the biggest threats to peace.

Almost two-thirds of Ambassadors actively lead change in their communities to bring about lasting peace and justice. One Young World co-founded Extremely Together with the Kofi Annan Foundation, a unique initiative in which young leaders enable their peers to tackle extremism of all kinds.

Ambassadors in Action

Leading by example, One Young World Ambassadors, from various sectors, explain the ways in which they used their previous experiences at One Young World Summits, to launch these initiatives within their companies and the wider community. The case studies demonstrate the ways in which this year's cohort of Delegates can take the inspiration they gain in London, and turn it into meaningful impact. Mama Bee is joined on stage with four exceptional ambassadors:

- Jonny Jacobs who led the 'Let's Talk' campaign with McVities in order to promote mental health awareness in the UK.

Sustainability

Sustainability at the Summit

Sustainability is a top priority for One Young World and plays a crucial role in the Summit. One Young World is determined to do everything possible to reduce the Summit's carbon footprint, and is committed to playing its part, in both supporting, and delivering on the 2015 Paris Climate Change Agreement as rapidly and effectively as possible.

Hydrogen Electrolysis: Campaigning for Green Mobility

One Young World partnered with Siemens, Linde, and Mainzer Stadtwerke, whose teams are demonstrating a technological avenue towards green mobility based on green hydrogen electrolysis. This innovative process of producing green fuel can be used to power fuel cell powered vehicles. Unlike traditional internal combustion engines which emit greenhouse gases, fuel cell direct emissions consist of water and heat. With this initiative, harmful emissions can be significantly reduced, and progress can be made in the campaign for green mobility.

- In collaboration with One Young World, Siemens and local partners will work to produce 50 tonnes of green hydrogen with Silyzer 200 electrolyzers, which are powered by renewable energy sources
- Hydrogen produced will primarily be used by public transport fuel cell buses in the Rhein-Mainz region, and secondly, by local hydrogen (H2) consuming industry partners

I think One Young World is leading on showing us how to adapt our own lives to be more sustainable. I think the goal to have a fully sustainable event is very inspiring and helps others understand that making some changes is not that hard."

Ana Rita De Medeiros Portugal

Transportation around London

- All hotels selected are within a 15-minute walk from Central Hall Westminster and the Queen Elizabeth II Centre
- Delegates are provided with Oyster Cards to promote the use of public transport, where walking is not a feasible option
- When car journeys are unavoidable, electric vehicles are prioritised
- One Young World Counsellors are provided with predominantly electric transportation, using the I-Pace model supplied by Jaguar Land Rover

Flights

The most significant contribution to the Summit's carbon footprint is air travel. In order to counter the environmental impact, One Young World has taken the following steps:

- One Young World Partners provide details of the carbon offsetting schemes used to offset their Delegates travel to and from the Summit
- All Delegates living in Europe are encouraged to travel to London by way of train
- Through the 'BP Target Neutral' programme, BP supports One Young World in offsetting the emissions of all flights to and from the Summit, including other emissions associated with Summit production and accommodation
- This year, 350+ of our Delegates and Partners do not emit any carbon from flight travel as they are based in London

Meat Reduction

Catering at the Queen Elizabeth II Centre for Delegates is entirely meat free.

All One Young World Partners hosting Delegate dinners on the 23 and 24 October are encouraged to provide vegetarian and vegan options.

Efforts to minimise single-use plastic

One Young World has taken numerous steps to reduce single-use plastic waste at the Summit, including the following:

- Refillable flasks provided to every attendee by Coca-Cola, the official soft drinks Partner. All Coca-Cola drinks at the Summit are recyclable, using only cans, glass or PET
- Coca-Cola, Pladis Global and Jacob Douwe Egberts provide recycling bins for their products
- All hot drinks served in easy to recycle 'ButterflyCups' and Vegware coffee cups. The ButterflyCup can be recycled with regular paper such as newspaper and cardboard, and its paperboard material is constructed from sustainable forests (FSC, FESC approved)

- All One Young World umbrella packaging supplied by Omnipack is biodegradable EL724 plastic
- All Exhibitors encouraged to produce event stands with minimal plastic onsite

Accessibility

Accessibility at the Summit

One Young World formed an Accessibility Advisory Group ahead of the London 2019 Summit.

The aim is to improve the Delegates experience, paying particular attention to access requirements to ensure every Delegate has the best Summit experience. One Young World enlisted the expertise of past Ambassadors to help realise the commitment made to improve the service.

These specially selected Ambassadors formed a panel, drawing from their professional and personal experiences to help steer and inform the process.

Thank you to Devika Malik, Sarah Musau, Liz Jessop, Fadeia Hossain, Jack Milne, Kayla Kelly and Anthony Ford Shurbrook for your valuable contributions and wealth of knowledge so far.

As a result of this collaboration, we are proud that this year's Summit is our most inclusive yet. Each Delegate has the opportunity to request a buddy for their Summit experience.

An assessment and audit was conducted for all venues to ensure accessibility requirements before the Summit. A contact email address for any accessibility issues or queries throughout the Summit was also provided to the Delegates.

It is immensely pleasing to see a global platform like One Young World walking their talk and setting an example, so when I was asked to be a part of the Accessibility Advisory Group, to ensure that the summit experience is truly inclusive for participants of all abilities, the answer was a resounding YES from me!"
